WEALTH OF THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The Hawaiian or Sandwich Islands, lying in Pacific Ocean, 2,100 miles from San Francisco, on the line of the steamer for Australia, are at this time attracting the attention of this country to an unusual degree. The export trade of these islands, which had grown from $350,000 in 1860 to $2,000,000 in 1876, reached last year the large sum of to this country. The greater part of this was sugar and rice, with which ports have increased from $800,000 to

At this time there exists much dissatisfaction with their Government on the part of the planters of the Islands. King Kalakaua has largely increased the 700,000 in excess of its receipts; and this increasing burden must largely be borne by internal taxation, which would, of necessity, fall upon the producing classes, who are nearly all Americans, engaged in raising sugar

The feeling against the King is so great as to threaten an insurrection that may result in the overthow of his government, and the interests of this demand that in such event no European Government should be allowed to get possession of the islands or establish a protectorate over them. There has been for a number of years a large party there who favored annexation to this country, and in the event of the failure to maintain their royal family on the throne, that should be the result sought by our own Government. In addition to their commercial value, they would be an extremely valuable navai station. The population of the islands, which at the first authorized census, in 1832, was 130,000, almost entirely natives, has fallen to 85,000, of which only about 40,000 are natives, and the remainder 25,000 Chinese, 10,000 Portuguese, 4,000 of the South.
